Alaska does not offer an Address Confidentiality Program (ACP) but there is program development in progress.

COMING SOON: ALASKA ADDRESS CONFIDENTIALITY PROGRAM (ACP)

HB 239, which created Alaska's Address Confidentiality Program (ACP), took effect on July 1, 2026, and the state is currently building the systems and processes needed to launch the program. The ACP will provide eligible survivors with a substitute post office box address that can be used instead of their physical address, along with secure mail forwarding to help protect their location. Participants will be enrolled for five years, with the option to renew to maintain protection, subject to eligibility requirements.

WHEN CAN I ENROLL IN THE ALASKA ADDRESS CONFIDENTIALITY PROGRAM?

The Department of Administration is developing regulations, application forms, verification procedures, confidentiality safeguards, secure databases, and processes for enrollment and mail forwarding, while coordinating with state and municipal agencies so they are prepared to accept the substitute address. The program is not yet open for enrollment, and a launch date has not been announced. Survivors should look out for additional information from the state about when the ACP is available, who is eligible, and how to apply.
